

Stephen Heywood

My work takes influence from things that are industrial, mechanical and manmade. I often reference architectural structures that have surrounded me throughout my life. These consist of barns, silos, factories and water towers as well as many other structures. Many of these buildings are used for containment and are in essence vessels of function. The simple geometric shapes of these structures are often echoed in the main body and various parts of my pieces.