

Annie Rhodes Lee

It has always intrigued me how our eyes compel our hands to tell stories, to create metaphors that tie us to each other and ground us to the earth. With the speed and fragmentation of visual language today, our stories stack one atop another as our cultures spread across geographical boundaries. My work is guided by the belief that the objects of our culture reflect the perspectives of their time and place thereby helping to reshape our understandings.